

Patriam releases sustainability report for 2022 - for a sustainable and long-term development

Today, Patriam releases the sustainability report for 2022, where we report on our sustainability efforts and our four focus areas.

"Everything we do works in the same direction – to fulfill our mission and our vision while working to contribute to the Global Sustainability Goals," says Ylva Hagelbäck, responsible for sustainability work at Patriam.

"When you go out for a walk, you want to be met by architecture that fits in, that elevates the area and enriches your life. Unfortunately, many newly produced houses are the exact opposite. We want to change that. That's why we develop homes that you can live in and be touched by for a long time. As an established player in the construction industry, we have a great responsibility for these issues and attach great importance to it throughout our entire process, from the early stages until the customer moves in," says Andreas Holmberg, CEO at Patriam.

Four focus areas

Patriam has concluded four focus areas; sustainable business, sustainable social development, sustainable customer offer and sustainable work life. In connection with the sustainability report, a sustainability policy has also been adopted that covers both the ecological, social and economic aspects. "We have set a number of goals in our sustainability policy that we want to achieve, these are ambitious and we are humble about the task, but we owe it to tomorrow's generation to live up to this", says Ylva Hagelbäck.

Initiatives and certifications

Patriam has taken new initiatives during the year to strengthen the company's sustainability work. Among other things, a green bond has been issued, the second bond in Sweden to be certified green by the Climate Bonds Initiative. In addition, Patriam builds houses with the Nordic Swan Ecolabel that are reviewed from a life-cycle perspective, which means a comprehensive approach to the entire construction process, the building as well as its use and management. Furthermore, Patriam has launched Patriam Trygg Affär to create security for our customers who are making perhaps the biggest and most important deal of their lives.
