

HAKI SAFETY ESTABLISHES A WAREHOUSE ON THE EXPANSIVE NORWEGIAN WEST COAST

HAKI Safety meets the increasing demand for safety products and solutions for the energy sector by establishing a warehouse and office in Stavanger, Norway. The establishment enables continued growth within system scaffold in aluminium for both the energy and construction sectors along the Norwegian west coast.

Thomas Schüller, Chief Commercial Officer of HAKI Safety, says: "The establishment is proof of our future confidence and commitment to the energy sector in Norway. Warehouse capacity is redistributed within the group and with the establishment, we will meet our customers' demands for lead times, which often means same-day deliveries. On the premises, on-site training is also possible, which is something that we know is in demand and appreciated by our customers.

Thomas Schüller continues: "We have a strong sales force in the major markets in Europe. In recent years, we have worked purposefully to increase cross-selling within the group, where we combine our system scaffold with work zone safety solutions, such as catchfans and barrier systems."

HAKI Safety has signed a long-term agreement with Rogaland Jernvare AS for a 1,200-square-meter warehouse and office area including a 3,000-square-meter open courtyard close to road E39 north of Stavanger. The venue is state-of-the-art and has an attractive geographical location in the region.
