
Carlsquare weekly market letter: Into thin air

The stock market is going into thin air. This is not in itself a sell signal, as many traders have learned the hard way. Let the trend be your friend, but stay close to the exit as the market is vulnerable and a small trigger at the moment can create a bigger move

Interest rates, inflation expectations, the USD and oil prices are all heading in the wrong direction as the market continues to climb a wall of fear. As it now looks, the negative trigger could very well be interest rates moving in the wrong direction as inflation expectations rise again
