
Weekly Edge Case – Stille

A share can trade within reach of its 52-week high and still screen as better value than it did a week ago. That is the small paradox behind this week's name. Stille, the Swedish maker of surgical instruments and operating tables, has drifted up over the past year, yet the score that moved this week was not the price chart but its Value reading. Each edition of the Weekly Edge Case takes one company surfaced by Market Edge and reads it through the framework: Quality Rating alongside Value and Momentum. This week Stille earns the slot because its Value score stepped up from Fairly Priced to Attractively Priced, even as the stock sits close to its highs.
