

Swedish company Siama joins XPartners

XPartners continues to grow and now welcomes the Swedish company Siama AB to the group. The acquisition is made through the subsidiary NSP and strengthens the group's specialist expertise in sustainable mobility, public transport, and electrification.

Siama was founded in 2021 and is based in Sala, Sweden. The company has five employees with specialist knowledge in traffic planning, transport development, e-mobility, and public transport. Siama offers services in project management, tender processes, procurement, contract law, fleet electrification, business and operational development, as well as engineering support related to mobility and the transport transition. Its clients include both private and public sector entities, such as municipalities, regional authorities, and vehicle manufacturers.

"Siama brings valuable expertise in sustainable mobility, electrification, and public transport planning. Their knowledge aligns closely with the transformations currently shaping the built environment. We see great potential for collaboration within the group and are happy to welcome the team to NSP and XPartners," says Afshin Monazam, CEO of NSP.

The company works with green technologies and aims to improve the interaction between technology and the environment through solutions that combine commercial insight with a strong focus on sustainability.

"Becoming part of NSP gives us new opportunities to grow alongside other specialist companies within the XPartners Group. We are passionate about the future of mobility and look forward to contributing our knowledge in a broader context where sustainability and development go hand in hand," says Johnny Struwe, CEO of Siama.
