"Witchspire marks a new chapter for us as a studio, and we couldn't be prouder," said Atey Ghailan, CEO of Envar. "We've worked with industry giants such as Riot Games, Blizzard Entertainment, Tencent, Netflix, and Wizards of the Coast and now have the opportunity to create our own world in the survival and adventure game genres," Atey added. "This announcement is our first step in building a AA studio and establishing Witchspire as a fresh, new quality IP and we're delighted to be able to share it with you."

Early Access presents an opportunity for players to experience the game for a lower price, prior to the official 1.0 launch, and to give valuable feedback during the continued development of Witchspire. "It's a chance for us to collaborate with our players to deliver the best possible game experience" explains Liam O'Neill, Head of Games at Envar. It's a strategy that's been wildly successful for Swedish title Valheim, as well as Palworld from Japanese developer Pocketpair.

Participation in Future Games Show during Gamescom means that Witchspire was chosen as a stand-out among other pitched titles, being given the honour of a world premiere in a showcase that features developers both large and small.
