INVISIO has signed a framework agreement with the Netherlands Ministry of Defense that could be worth up to SEK 365 million. The agreement will run initially for five years, with an option for two one-year extensions. Orders are expected to start this year.

The agreement covers INVISIO's personal communication systems for mobile users in the field and includes a wide range of products, including the new T30 and X7 headsets and several different control unit models and intelligent cables.

The customer estimates the value of the agreement for the first five years at approximately SEK 260 million, rising to SEK 365 million in the event of a two-year extension. The agreement includes no guarantees regarding volumes.

Lars Højgård Hansen, INVISIO CEO, said: "We are proud that the defence forces in the Netherlands have chosen INVISIO. This is a clear sign of the confidence placed in our solutions and proof that our significant investments in the product portfolio and organization in recent years are now yielding results."
