

Amazon Studios licenses Accurateplayer SDK from Codemill to power the Media Supply Chain

Umeå, Sweden, 6th of October 2023 - Codemill (Nasdaq: CDMIL) has announced that its Accurateplayer SDK has been licensed by Amazon Studios to be used in their Media Supply Chain platform. The deal is worth 4 million SEK annual recurring revenue and will have an effect on the revenues from October 2023.

Amazon Studios, a subsidiary of Amazon.com, Inc., specialises in creating and producing original films and television series for a global audience. Original series all premiere exclusively on the streaming platform, Prime Video, which is available in over 240 countries and territories. In film, Amazon Studios produces and acquires original movies for theatrical release and exclusively for Prime Video.

Accurate Player SDK is a cloud-based professional media player framework, created for broadcast, post-production, and media professionals. The Accurate Player SDK ecosystem enables users to build custom applications and unique workflows, with advanced software functionality, a front-end component library and well documented REST APIs.

Karin Bergner, acting CEO, Codemill, commented: "Amazon Studios, one of the biggest entertainment content producers in the World, is on a journey to further grow its content production capacity. Codemill has been part of the work to design new ways of working, and now we are happy to also license our software to power their Media Supply Chain."
