Nocom acquires Internet consulting company Cyberink

Nocom AB (publ) has signed a Letter of Intent to acquire all shares of Internet consulting company Cyberink Information Systems AB, based in Stockholm, Sweden.

Cyberink is a specialist company within the field of parallel publishing, primarily for the web and mobile Internet, and its customers are mainly companies in traditional Swedish industry. This profile is well in accordance with Nocom's structure and focus on business-to-business-solutions over the Internet and wireless networks.

"The demand for competitive publishing solutions for the industry is increasing rapidly, as information is often produced and published in different processes, which are usually not connected. With our solutions we bring these processes together, saving both time and money for our customers," says Niclas Sahlgren, President and CEO of Cyberink.

"Together with Nocom, we will be a strong provider with complementing areas of expertise, and one of the few Internet consulting companies to master the entire e-business process – from idea to implemented business benefit."

Today Nocom, which was one of the first companies in the Nordic area to help its customers develop business services for the Internet, handles comprehensive service and support undertakings for many of the market's systems for electronic commerce. In addition, Nocom is one of the leading companies in the development and operation of mobile e-business solutions.

"Today Nocom Integration, the consulting organization in the Nocom group, has one of Sweden's most experienced teams in e-business, especially in the area of mobile solutions, with several major projects completed", says Mathias Båth, Managing Director of Nocom Integration.

"Through the acquisition of Cyberink we gain even more competence and will be one of the most complete e-business-partners for the industry."
