

Quickbit's CEO resigns at his own request, Anders Jonson appointed acting CEO

Quickbit's CEO Hammad Abuseifan has informed the board that he is resigning at his own request for personal reasons. The board has appointed Anders Jonson, Chief Operating Officer since August 2022, as acting CEO from today until a permanent CEO takes office.

Hammad Abuseifan is leaving his position as CEO of Quickbit for personal reasons. The board has appointed the company's COO Anders Jonson as acting CEO. Anders will take office immediately but will continue in his role as COO for the company. Hammad will remain as a board member in the company and hold an advisory role to Anders Jonson during a transition period. The company has started a process to recruit a permanent CEO for Quickbit.

"During my time as CEO, we have continued to broaden our product portfolio, launched a number of new products and increased our presence in several markets, as well as acquired technical platforms for faster "time-to-market". I am now stepping down from my operational role within the company to return to a more strategic role at the board. I hand over the baton to Anders with a warm hand and will remain as an advisor, says Hammad Abuseifan, CEO Quickbit.

"The board thanks Hammad for his efforts as operational CEO at Quickbit during an intensive period with numerous product launches," says Mikael Karlsson, Chairman of the Board Quickbit.
