

PRESS RELEASE
April 7, 2016

Polygiene takes the first step into the tactical gear and garment segment together with Propper.

The American based company Propper announces that they are now shipping new high-performance base layers for extreme use by military, first responders, and discerning civilians.

“Between the Polygiene treatment and modern construction techniques, Propper stands behind its commitment to build product right. We won’t cheapen the product to reduce our costs. We always work to build in value.” says Joe Ruggeri Senior VP of Merchandising and Product Development at Propper.

About Propper

Making tactical gear with a purpose has been a way of life for Propper, since their U.S. Navy contract in 1967. Today, Propper designs and manufactures tactical clothing and gear that keeps military, law enforcement, and public safety professionals protected whether they’re in the service, on the job, or off for the weekend.
