NOTE's plant in China is opening its operations earlier than expected

On 14 February, NOTE announced that production at the plant in China had been temporarily halted due to an employee being in contact with a Covid-positive relative. In line with local authorities' protection restrictions, the plant was put into quarantine. After regular PCR tests of all the plant's employees, no cases of Covid have been found. Thus, the Chinese authorities have given their approval for the plant to resume production from Wednesday 16 February, which is earlier than originally estimated.
