Polygiene strengthens its position in the workwear segment through new partnership with Belgian Post

The press release issued by Polygiene on November 17th, 2016, concerning the company's cooperation with Belgian Post contained statements that may be perceived as misleading. This new press release does not imply any changes of material significance, but is merely intended to clarify some of the information about the collaboration.

Polygiene has signed a new partnership agreement with the Belgian Post Group, bpost, which has begun to provide odor-free workwear to its employees. Polygiene's odor control treatment will enable bpost employees to stay fresh and confident in their uniforms throughout their workdays. The first Polygiene-treated odor-free polo shirts from the shirt manufacturers are scheduled to be delivered to bpost at the end of the year.

Bpost is Belgium's leading provider of postal and logistics services to, from and within the country. Polygiene's partnership with bpost further advances Polygiene's position in the market for workwear.

"We are very proud of the cooperation with the Belgian Post Group," said Christian von Uthmann, CEO, Polygiene. "The partnership with bpost definitely strengthens our presence in the workwear segment and should be seen in light of the fact that Polygiene already continuously supplies odor control technology to the workwear of Deutsche Post, DHL and Propper, makers high quality clothing for police and military personnel."
